Chapter 218: The Infinite Expansion of Power - A Million Clones

The multiverse had known Sung Jin-Woo as the Absolute Humanoid Being, a being whose power surpassed all others. But even this might, this dominance, was not enough for him. His ambitions stretched far beyond mere control of the realms and dominions. To truly transcend, he had to expand beyond the boundaries of his singular existence.

The Creation of One Million of Clones

Sung Jin-Woo, in a moment of profound reflection and resolve, decided to embark on a path that no being had ever considered: the creation of one million of clones, each imbued with only 0.00000000001% of his original power. This was an immense undertaking, one that required a profound amount of energy and precision. His clones would not simply be replicas—they would be extensions of himself, each with their own worlds, each capable of independent thought and action, yet all ultimately linked to his original form.

Each of these clones was born from the very essence of his being, using the infinite power of the Scepter of Dominion to mold them into his image. Their abilities were vast, though scaled down, their loyalty unwavering. They were granted the potential to grow and evolve, with every decision, every challenge they faced contributing to the growth of the collective.

The Inner Worlds

To house these clones, Sung Jin-Woo created one million of inner worlds, each a microcosm of existence. The time dilation within these realms was unimaginable: one second outside equaled one million years inside. This allowed each clone to train, grow, and evolve at an accelerated pace, while the outside world barely moved.

For each clone, an inner world was built within their very essence. The clones were not merely vessels of power—they were the rulers of their domains. Inside each clone's body, the time dilation continued, creating yet another layer of existence: one day outside equal to one million years inside. This compounded the effect, allowing each inner world to become vast realms of its own, complete with landscapes, creatures, and challenges that would push their growth to unimaginable heights.

The Creation of Lesser Absolutes

As each clone took dominion over their respective inner worlds, they were granted the creation of a lesser Absolute for each of their realms. These Absolutes were not the grand, divine forces of the original Sung Jin-Woo, but they were powerful in their own right—being able to control the very fabric of their inner worlds. They governed their realities, shaping landscapes, bringing life, and molding their domains into perfect representations of their creators' wills.

Each lesser Absolute was designed to be an extension of Sung Jin-Woo's immense power. It was a direct reflection of the immense effort he put into forging his clones and their worlds. The inner worlds created within his body served as the perfect foundation for these Absolutes, allowing them to rise in influence and strength with every passing moment, while the time dilation ensured their rapid growth and potential.

The Endless Chain of Creation

As the clones placed themselves within their inner worlds, a cycle of infinite creation began. They would command their inner worlds to expand, build, and nurture even more worlds inside them. These new worlds would, in turn, give birth to new clones and new lesser Absolutes, each capable of expanding further into the vast unknown. This was the beginning of an endless cycle—a multiverse within a multiverse—with each layer pushing the boundaries of power and existence to incomprehensible limits.

In essence, Sung Jin-Woo had created an infinite army of selves, each with the potential to influence their worlds in ways that transcended even the vastest dominions. These clones, though small in comparison to the original, were designed to grow exponentially, forever expanding the influence of the Absolute Humanoid Being.

A New Era of Creation

With each passing moment, the clones and their inner worlds grew, expanding at an unfathomable rate. The multiverse, already under Sung Jin-Woo's dominion, now found itself subject to a force even greater than before—an expanding army of clones, each with their own will and power, yet all part of the same, singular entity.

And so, the Divine Triad and their forces watched as the Absolute Humanoid Being's influence stretched beyond all expectations. Each new world, each new creation, only cemented his status as the ultimate sovereign of all realms and realities.

"This is only the beginning," Sung Jin-Woo mused, his gaze sweeping across the infinite expanses of his newly created worlds. "My power will know no limit, for I have created a universe within my own being."

The age of Sung Jin-Woo had entered a new phase—one where infinity was not a limit, but a canvas for his eternal growth.
